GRACE FARMS FOUNDATION LAUNCHES JUSTICE INITIATIVE
TO ACTIVATE AND SYNERGIZE PRIVATE AND PUBLIC SECTOR
TO DISRUPT AND HELP ERADICATE CHILD EXPLOITATION

Inaugural Two-Day Workshop to be Held at Grace Farms November 5-6

NEW CANAAN, CT — Advancing its work in a core program area, Grace Farms Foundation today announced that it will inaugurate its Justice Initiative by organizing a two-day workshop to create synergies across the private and public sector and to activate community groups to develop comprehensive long-term strategies and partnerships to combat child sex trafficking and gender-based violence. Convening on November 5 and 6, 2015 from 8:30 am to 6:30 pm, the workshop will address the three key areas of the Foundation’s Justice Initiative to create a multi-disciplinary model focused on disrupting and eradicating child exploitation: awareness and prevention, investigation and prosecution, and victim services. Over the two-day period, the workshop will progress from discussing the issue on an international, to national and then local level. Open to the public, the workshop will be held at Grace Farms, the new center for nature, arts, community, justice and faith in New Canaan, Connecticut.

The workshop is organized by Sharon Prince, President of Grace Farms Foundation; Krishna R. Patel, Director of Justice Initiatives at Grace Farms; and Rod Khattabi, Director of Safety & Advisor for Justice Initiatives at Grace Farms. Ms. Patel is the former Deputy Chief for National Security & Major Crimes for the U.S. Attorney’s Office for the District of Connecticut. Mr. Khattabi previously oversaw the New Haven office in Connecticut with the Department of Homeland Security, Homeland Security Investigations.

“Grace Farms is a place for people to come together for the greater good,” Sharon Prince said. “Child exploitation is a matter of global importance, and our stake in the ground is to do our part to help prevent this brutal crime, first here in Connecticut, then nationally, by bringing together the private and public groups that have already been involved in this critical effort.”

Among the awareness and prevention topics to be discussed is the opportunity to impede child trafficking over the Internet through the development and deployment of effective big data technologies. Grace Farms Foundation, a private non-profit organization, is pioneering the support of the development and facilitation of big data platforms and advanced technologies for use in the public sector by those who are on the frontlines and best positioned to disrupt the criminal networks that exploit children.

“Grace Farms Foundation is committed to finding ways to utilize the most advanced technologies to help eradicate child trafficking,” Krishna Patel said. “The Internet has become the marketplace for the exploitation of children. However, the amount of publicly available information found on the Internet is far too large for most state and local law enforcement entities to analyze in any meaningful way with their current tools. New technologies have created unparalleled opportunities to perform innovative analytics using publicly available data to detect, investigate and disrupt child exploitation.”

Agenda items related to investigation and prosecution methods will include the discussion of the most effective strategies on an international, national and local level to combat child exploitation as well as the best critical care models utilized to restore and stabilize victims. The workshop will bring together experts who will focus on deploying big data platforms as well as amending state legislation to incorporate more recent changes to federal laws including the creation of victim restitution funds. The workshop will also include a discussion on the relationship between domestic violence and human trafficking. Sessions focusing on victim services will convene non-governmental organizations including faith based programs and other groups to discuss creating effective partnerships to leverage resources and provide direct victim services as well as creating effective awareness campaigns. The workshop is designed to engage communities to act and to combat the brutality of this crime.

The Foundation believes that an effective multi-pronged strategy requires the combined resources and coordination of governmental groups, private sector entities and non-governmental organizations. Participants in the workshop will include Congressman Jim Himes; Louis E. deBaca, Director of the Justice Department’s Office of Sex Offender Sentencing, Monitoring, Apprehending, Registering and Tracking (SMART Office); Anthony Scandiffio, Deputy Assistant Director, Department of Homeland Security/Homeland Security Investigations; Jeffery Sallet, Public Corruption/Civil Rights Unit, Federal Bureau of Investigation; Bradley Myles, CEO, Polaris Project; Joette Katz, Commissioner, Department of Children & Families; Emily Pasnak-Lapchick, End Trafficking Program Officer, U.S. Fund for UNICEF; Gary Haugen, President and CEO, International Justice Mission; Richard Lui, News Anchor MSNBC & NBC; and Dr. Sharon Cooper, CEO of Developmental & Forensic Pediatrics among others.

Additional program highlights include the premiere screening of Not Just Pictures by GroundSwell Productions and a book signings and readings with best-selling authors Corban Addison, author of The Tears of Dark Water, and Conor Grennan, author of Little Princes: One Man’s Promise to Bring Home the Lost Children of Nepal. For a full schedule and list of participants, please see text at the bottom of the release and a link to the website: gracefarms.org/calendar.

Grace Farms recently opened to the public with a hugely successful two-day celebration, which welcomed more than 5,000 visitors throughout the festivities. Proceeds from the Foundation’s Opening Night Benefit Concert that featured Aloe Blacc will support Grace Farms’ Justice Initiative.
